Tracking the Amur Falcon

In October every year, huge numbers of Amur falcons arrive in northeast India from Siberia en route to their final destination—Somalia, Kenya and South Africa

Siberia

South Africa

These birds have one of the longest migration routes of all, doing up to 20,000 km a year

The Amur falcon breeds in south-eastern parts of Siberia and northern China before migrating in large flocks across India and over the Arabian Sea to parts of Southern Africa

The infographic features a world map with a red dashed line tracing the migration path of Amur falcons from Siberia in the north to South Africa in the south. A large illustration of an Amur falcon in flight is positioned on the left side of the map.
